Post film screening discussion with Dr. Nadine B Semer, MD Hospice and Palliative Medicine

"End Game urges viewers to think about our last days on Earth not as a heartbreaking tragedy but as an opportunity for true closure." - The New York Times

End Game weaves together three stories of visionary medical providers who are working on the cutting edge of life and death. For many people "hospice" and "palliative care" are code words for giving up. These caregivers see it differently. They are dedicated to relieving suffering, and to changing the way we think about – and make choices about – how we live our lives as we near life's end.
